If there is a place in the middle of the Adriatic Coast that recalls the essence of the ancient ways of Dalmatia and yet offers modern standards, then it is definitely Tribunj. Although it has been oriented towards tourists for a long time, it has still remains an old fishermen's village. The docks are decorated in the early Fall with casks of domestic wines, and the life of Tribunj local fishermen moves into the hinter land where they work in their vineyards and olive groves, producing the wines and olive oil for which Tribunj is well known. The history of Tribunj is closely connected to the building of the small church of St. Nicholas, the protector of the village. There is a beautiful vantage point from which you can see the whole village. There is a pine forest, the beach Zamalin, and a little bit further there are two natural beaches
